CRUSADE ON FLIES

OVER WIDE SCOPE

Movement Started by The Star Spreads Throughout the Country.

Interest in the "swat the fly" campaign that was started by The Star two years ago is spreading to every section of the country. The yearbook of the Department of Agriculture is devoting attention to the crusade as being one of the most important methods of modern sanitation.

It has come to be generally recognized, of course, that flies are the greatest source of fly breeding, and the division of animal husbandry of the department has been trying some experiments this year in rearing manure piles around stables and on the farms unusable as fly breeding places. The scientists of the department recognized that manure was too valuable as a fertilizer to be destroyed.

It has rendered the manure worthless or harmful. Finally plain line was tried and the results from this method have been most promising. It is estimated that the total added expense is very low.

It has been found by experiment that about five pounds of lime per head of stock per day is effective, and the cost of this is not over 1 1/2 to 2 cents. So that if the lime is to be used on the land that is the most effective preservation that can be taken.

At the Iowa state fair this year it was impossible to screen the exhibition stables, but the management placed a large number of fly traps not only in the stables, but also in the surrounding grounds. The result was a perceptible diminution in the crop of flies. The same trapping experiment is being tried at the Beltsville experimental farm, and promises well.

The officials of the animal husbandry division are greatly interested in the preservation of the cattle industry in the southwestern states, and have issued a bulletin warning the farmers of that region not to sell their cattle until they have been treated with lime.

There has been a serious shortage of beef cattle in the west the past two years, and it is now expected that there will be more grass than there have been cattle to eat it. The cattle raisers have accordingly just awakened to the fact that there is an immense number of cattle in the southwestern states, and they have been buying them for breeding purposes.

Large Order for Single Ranch. One big ranch in the southwest bought 500 carloads of cows in Florida and a middle western railroad has had agents all through the southern states picking up cows cheap. During the past season 5,000 cattle were shipped through Birmingham, Ala., in a single day.

It is realized by the Department of Agriculture that as the tick eradication work progresses in the south the cow, that is now a pest, will be a valuable asset. The farmers there are anxious to get rid of it, and the ready money, but the department doubts after the cattle are sold that the small farmers of the south will ever be able to buy them back.
